PREAMBLE

> Extraordinary conditions do not create or enlarge constitutional power. The Constitution established a national government with powers deemed to be adequate, as they have proved to be both in war and peace, but these powers of the national government are limited by the Constitutional grants. Those who act under these grants are not at liberty to transcend the imposed limits because they believe that more or different power is necessary.[1]

Amicus Curiae has grave concerns over the posture of this interlocutory appeal. The Respondents' arguments raise serious and fundamental issues which threaten to eviscerate 210 years of constitutional jurisprudence, and to destroy the basic concept of "co-equal" branches of government. We are not only alarmed that Respondents persist with their autocratic notion of an "Imperial President," but that they do so on misstated "facts;" on mythical legal concepts that have no basis in domestic or international law; and by failing to provide this Court with relevant and controlling legal authority.

I. "FALSUS IN UNO, FALSUS IN OMNIBUS."

As Amicus Curiae, the NACDL advocates a standard of professional responsibility that includes candor to the court. Our criticisms should not be viewed as de minimis quibbling over obscure and irrelevant matters. Rather, Amicus

Respondents' make much ado about the "Mobbs' Declaration,"[12] yet Amicus suggests that the Court's skepticism below was warranted, and that this declaration is indeed meaningless for evaluating Hamdi's detention. Hamdi was transferred to the U.S. base at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba in January 2002.[13] Thus, by any mental process, the decision to detain him, in whatever status, had already been made. Yet, Mobbs' very position was not effectuated until months later - April 24, 2002.[14] But even his position as "Special Advisor to the Undersecretary of Defense (Policy)," is not the correct office responsible for such determinations. Rather, it is the Assistant Secretary of Defense for International Security Affairs.[15]

Respondents also argue that 10 U.S.C. § 956, somehow provides legal

These criteria - classified or not - utterly fail to comply with both international and U.S. law pertaining to classifying detainees. It is clear that the Court below was properly skeptical of Respondents' claims.[22] Where Respondents err, Amicus submits, is that an initial "battlefield" detention (a true function of military command), simply never occurred with respect to Hamdi - he surrendered to a third party! As unclassified Central Command Regulation 27-10, paragraph 5(a) [Addendum E-3 et seq.,][23] shows, there is no evidence Hamdi committed a "belligerent act" against the United States, and thus his "status" is clearly disputed. To camouflage this issue under the guise of "classification," is unconscionable.

[22]If Respondents' detention of Hamdi is ultra vires, following "orders" from the Commander-in-Chief is not a defense. Compare, Youngstown Sheet & Tube v. Sawyer, 103 F.Supp 569, 576 (D. DC 1952), aff'd 343 U.S. 579 (1952), and Persico, Nuremberg: Infamy on Trial (NY: Penguin Books, 1994).

[23]Amicus is unable to verify that this is the current edition, other than as of October 17, 2002, it was still part of the U.S. Army JAG School's publications.

II. THE LABEL "ENEMY COMBATANT" IS A MEANINGLESS TERM UNDER U.S. MILITARY AND INTERNATIONAL LAW.

Respondents repeatedly call Hamdi an "enemy combatant," but nowhere define its meaning or even provide authority that it has any legal meaning.[24] Amicus respectfully suggests that this label is both unwarranted procedurally and meaningless substantively.[25]

Ex Parte Quirin, 317 U.S. 1(1942), used the term "enemy combatant" synonymously with that of "enemy soldier,"[26] in the context of discussing "belligerents" in a formal, declared war. The Court gave no indication that it was creating a new jurisprudential concept in either international law or the Law of War. Nor is the phrase used in any of the 1949 Geneva Conventions or subsequent usage within international law. That the term "enemy combatant" has no other accepted legal meaning than being synonymous with that of "enemy soldier," is easily ascertained by the Supreme Court's next usage of the phrase in, In re Yamashita, 327

[24] Amicus is aware that this Court also used the phrase, "enemy combatant." Hamdi v. Rumsfeld, 296 F.3d 278, 281-83 (4th Cir. 2002). This inaccuracy is understandable as the issue had not been briefed.

[25] See generally, Maguire, Law and War: An American Story (NY: Columbia Univ. Press, 2000); and Trooboff (ed.), Law and Responsibility in Warfare: The Vietnam Experience, 85-88 (Chapel Hill, NC: Univ. N.C. Press, 1975) [no references to phrase "enemy combatant"].

[26] ". . . an enemy combatant who without uniform comes secretly through the lines . . . ." 317 U.S. at 31. See, Addenda, A-3; B; and D-2.

U.S. 1, 7 (1946). But, as the Yamashita Court recognized, General Yamashita was a bona fide "Prisoner of War," [327 U.S. at 5] - who had been an enemy soldier engaged in combat, viz., an "enemy combatant," with no special military, legal or other significance.

Indeed, the United States military does not elsewhere use the term "enemy combatant" to mean anything other than a reference to an enemy soldier.[27] Nor did Congress in enacting the Uniform Code of Military Justice, 10 U.S.C. § 801 et seq., use the phrase "enemy combatant."[28] Perhaps most damning to the Respondents' assertion in this regard is that the Department of Defense Dictionary of Military Terms,[29] nowhere lists or defines the term " enemy combatant."[30] Finally, the phrase "enemy combatant" is not used in either Convention III, Treatment of Prisoners of [27]See, Manual for Courts-Martial, 2000 Ed., Rule 916(c), Rules for Courts-Martial, and the "Discussion" which notes: "killing an enemy combatant in battle is justified." [Emphasis added]. The Manual for Courts-Martial is an Executive Order.

[28]In military jurisprudence, for the military to exercise "jurisdiction" over an individual, one must first possess military "status." See, Solorio v. United States, 483 U.S. 435 (1987). But, as noted in Solorio, that is a function textually committed to Congress, not the Commander-in-Chief pursuant to Article I, § 8; 483 U.S. at 440-41 .

[29]Available on-line at: http://www.dtic.mil/doctrine/jel/doddict/ [last accessed , September 20, 2002].

[30]This deliberately repeated mantra thus belies any suggestion that the Respondents are mistakenly using the term "enemy combatant" interchangeably with the concept of an "unlawful belligerent." Considering the legions of lawyers in the DoJ and DoD, such usage can hardly be characterized as an innocent "mistake."

War, or Convention IV, Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of the 1949 Geneva Accords.

United States ex rel. Zdunic v. Uhl, 137 F.2d 858 (2nd Cir. 1943), is instructive. Zdunic was detained pursuant to the Alien Enemy Act, 50 U.S.C. § 21. He challenged the factual determination that he was an "enemy alien." The District Court denied his habeas petition, but the Second Circuit held that he was entitled to a hearing on the "disputed facts" before the Court made a determination as to his legal status. Amicus proffers that conceptually, Zdunic's challenge to his "enemy alien" determination is no different than Hamdi's challenge to Respondents' claim that he is an "enemy combatant." But to say, as Respondents do, that Hamdi (versus an alien), cannot challenge his "labeling," is the height of arbitrariness and a gross denial of due process.

Respondents repeated use of the label "enemy combatant," as if it has some pertinent impact on the Petitioners' case, is respectfully nothing more than verbal camouflage - an attempt to shift the Court's focus away from the serious issue of habeas corpus.

III. THE PLAIN LANGUAGE OF THE CONSTITUTION.

> By virtue of their judicial power, the courts administer international law, including the common law of war, but when this law is displaced by statute or treaty, it becomes the duty of the Courts to administer this superceding municipal law.[31]

A. The Role of the Judiciary is to Adjudicate, not Abdicate.

> What are the allowable limits of military discretion, and whether or not they have been overstepped in a particular case, are judicial questions.[32]

The initial question is not what "deference" the Judiciary should give the Executive regarding Hamdi. Rather, in making his decisions regarding Hamdi, did the Commander-in-Chief (and Respondents) give due deference to the Constitution in relation to the rights of a U.S. citizen? The second issue which follows the constitutional inquiry is, have the Respondents complied with the governing laws regarding Hamdi's military imprisonment, to wit: 10 U.S.C. § 809; 18 U.S.C. § 4001; and the applicable treaties?

Deference is additionally inappropriate even where such may "affect" the other branches of government. As the Court noted in Japan Whaling Ass'n v. American Cetacean Soc., 478 U.S. 221, at 230 (1986), "one of the Judiciary's characteristic

This military text came from the height of WW II. The law has not changed since then. Machado v. Commanding Officer, 860 F.2d 542 (2nd Cir. 1988)[military habeas case].

B. Yamashita's Precedent Controls.

While beating the "enemy combatant" drum, Respondents ignore Yamashita, supra.[37] Yamashita was a classic habeas corpus case and while the Court denied relief on the merits, its decision on habeas jurisprudence remains controlling.

> The courts may inquire whether the detention complained of is within the authority of those detaining the petitioner. [327 U.S., at 8]
> [Congress] has not withdrawn, and the Executive branch of the government could not, unless there was suspension of the writ, withdraw from the courts the duty and power to make such inquiry into the authority . . . as may be made by habeas corpus. Id., 9 [Emphasis added].

The Court below had "the duty and power to make such inquiry" even if labeling Hamdi an "enemy combatant" had some jurisprudential meaning. The Respondents' arguments are just wrong. If their "deference" argument had any legal merit, the Yamashita Court certainly would have applied it and rejected, not used, the above quoted language.

[37]The opinion makes eight references to "enemy combatants;" all in the context suggested by Amicus, viz., enemy "soldiers."

C. "War Powers" Belong to Congress.

There is a clear textual commitment in Article I, § 8, giving Congress not only the power to "declare war," but also the power "To define and punish Piracies and Felonies committed on the high Seas, and Offences against the Law of Nations." These express grants, along with the other Article I, § 8, powers given to Congress, coupled with the absence of any similar powers in Article II, for the President, simply defeat any claims by Respondents that this Court must grant "deference" to the Commander-in-Chief's declaring Hamdi to be an "enemy."

Contrary to Respondents' representations, the President has no constitutional "core war powers."[38] Youngstown unequivocally teaches this. Two facts prove it. The President cannot veto a Congressional declaration of war.[39] Nor does the President even possess the basic "power" to appoint the Respondent, Secretary of Defense; the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff; or even commission officers

[38]Resp.Br. 16. The Prize Cases, 67 U.S. 635 (1862), are frequently erroneously cited for this premise. There, Lincoln acted out of "necessity," an emergency power. Congress was not in session, but upon their return, he sought and received legislative ratification. 67 U.S. at 670-71.

[39]Treanor, Fame, The Founding, and the Power to Declare War, 82 Cornell L. Rev. 695 (1997).

without the "advice and consent" of the Senate. 10 U.S.C. §§ 113; 152; and 531. The extraordinary "deference" argument is simply a fiction - repudiated by the text and principles of the Constitution. Someone with "core war powers" does not need Senate approval to commission a Second Lieutenant! Mimmack v. United States, 97 U.S. 426, 437 (1878).

Starting with Little v. Barrame, supra, the Supreme Court has held that military orders of the President are subordinate to Congressional "war powers." And, in Jecker v. Montgomery, 54 U.S. 498, 515 (1851), the Court rejected another Presidential "military" order affecting the Judiciary:

> [U]nder the Constitution of the United States . . . [e]very court of the United States . . . derive(s) its jurisdiction and judicial authority from the Constitution or the laws of the United States. And neither the President nor any military officer can . . . decide upon the rights of the United States, or of individuals in prize cases, nor administer the laws of nations. [emphasis added].[40]

The Joint Resolution did not change this concept, and the Respondents simply cannot claim what does not exist.

D. The Respondents Must Comply With the "Laws of War."

We do not make the laws of war but we respect them so far

[40]The Court had rejected this Executive "core war power" idea before. "[The President's] conquests do not . . . extend the operation of our institutions and laws beyond the limits before assigned to them by the legislative power." Fleming v. Page, 50 U.S. 603, 615 (1850) [Emphasis added].

> as they do not conflict with the commands of Congress or the Constitution.[41]

The conspicuous absence of any reference to any Presidential "core war powers,"in Yamashita, deflates any claim that they exist. Respondents further refus e to acknowledge that there is a bona fide dispute as to Hamdi's actual status, and that treaties which are the supreme "law of the land," provide for a judicial determination of that status. See, United States v. Noriega, 808 F.Supp 791 (S.D. Fl. 1992). No deference is due to an implied suggestion that the Judiciary ignore its responsibilitie s under Article 5, Geneva III [the POW Convention], especially when Respondents continue to ignore their own regulations, viz., DODD 2310.1, paragraph 3.3 (1994).[42] No deference is due an entity that fails to acknowledge, much less follow its own regulations.

Fundamental constitutional law mandates that:

> The constitution of the United States declares a treaty to be the supreme law of the land. Of consequence its obligation on the courts of the United States must be admitted.[43]

The United States is a signatory to The International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,[44] ["ICCPR"]. During the Senate's "advice and consent" debate prior to ratification in 1992, Senator Pell observed, "The covenant is rooted in Western democratic traditions and values. It guarantees basic rights and freedoms consistent with our own Constitution and Bill of Rights." [emphasis added] [45] Senator Moynihan expressed the same view, "This covenant reflects the principles articulated in our own Bill of Rights."[46] While the United States entered a number of "reservations"[47] no reservations were given to the following provision of the ICCPR :

> Article 9, Section 4: Anyone who is deprived of his liberty by arrest or detention shall be entitled to take proceedings before a court, in order that court may decide without delay on the lawfulness of his detention and order his release if the detention is not lawful." [emphasis added].

This is consistent with 200 years of habeas jurisprudence.

Amicus does not suggest that the ICCPR automatically mandates Petitioner's release, because it is clear that such a function is reserved to the Judiciary after ascertaining the legality of the detention. However, by virtue of the ICCPR, the

IV. "MARTIAL LAW" HAS BEEN ILLEGALLY ESTABLISHED.

A. Historical Background.

Early in the Civil War, President Lincoln unilaterally suspended the privilege of habeas corpus - until he could reconvene Congress and obt ain their constitutional authorization. He also declared martial law. [48] Litigation ensued to include habeas corpus actions. The Solicitor of Lincoln's War Department, William Whiting, coordinated the government's defenses to these cases, and he issued instructions on how to defend them. Those "litigation instructions" were published in 1864, in a pamphlet entitled, Military Arrests in Time of War. That has just been republished: Whiting, War Powers Under the Constitution of the United States (Union, NJ: The Lawbook Exchange, Ltd., 2002) [hereinafter "Whiting"]. Without direct citation,

---

[48]See, Wiener, (a noted military scholar) A Practical Manual of Martial Law, 58 (Harrisburg, PA: The Military Service Pub. Co., 1940) [hereinafter "Wiener"].

Amicus respectfully submits that the Respondents make the verbatim arguments first advanced by Whiting:

- "[The President's] right to seize, capture, detain, and imprison such persons is as unquestionable as his right to carry on the war."[49]
- "[T]he provision that unreasonable seizures or arrests are prohibited has no application to military arrests in time of war." [emphasis added][50]
- "It is, however, enough to justify arrests in any locality, however far removed from the battlefields of contending armies, that it is a time of war, and the arrest is required . . .to prevent an act of hostility . . . ." [emphasis in original][51]
- "While this ample authority is given to the commander-in-chief to arrest the persons of aliens . . . a far greater power over the persons of our own citizens is . . . given to the President in case of public danger." [emphasis added][52]

Unfortunately for Whiting's career, the Supreme Court firmly rejected these bizarre and unconstitutional arguments in Milligan, supra. With the exception of the now discredited Japanese-American internment cases during World War II,[53] - which involved martial law - Whiting's concept of an absolute and unreviewable Chief

Executive is both untenable constitutionally and has been rejected for 140 years.[54]

Amicus Curiae respectfully suggests that a close examination of the Respondents' arguments shows that they have established de facto "martial law" by the stratagem of using the meaningless label, "enemy combatant." The President defines "martial law" as follows:

> A government temporarily governing the civil population within its territory or a portion of its territory through its military forces as necessity may require.[55]

Regardless of the label that the Respondents place on Hamdi, [56] he remains a "civilian" who is now somehow subject to exclusive military governance and detention. That too, the Milligan Court condemned as illegal, for the same reasons that it is illegal herein: "Martial law cannot arise from a threatened invasion. The necessity must be actual and present; the invasion real, such as effectually closes the courts and deposes the civil administration." 71 U.S. at 127 [emphasis added].

[56]It is ironic that the Government in Milligan attempted to defeat the Court's jurisdiction by arguing that Milligan was a "Prisoner of War." 71 U.S. at 131.

The Respondents are sub silentio seeking the imprimatur of this Court justifying their actions under martial law.

Here, the Respondents have de facto, illegally and selectively implemented "martial law" as applied to Hamdi. They thus seek to avoid Constitutional and judicial scrutiny, by claiming a phantom Presidential "war power." Again, the Respondents' arguments herein are directly linked to Whiting's:

> [The President] must have the power to hold whatever persons he has a right to capture without interference of courts during the war, and he has the right to capture all persons who he has reasonable cause to believe are hostile to the Union, and are engaged in hostile acts. [emphasis added].[57]

In rejecting Whiting's position, the Court in Milligan wisely went on to explain: "Martial rule can never exist where the courts are open, and in the proper and unobstructed exercise of their jurisdiction." 71 U.S. at 127 [Emphasis added]. This interpretation of martial law was not an aberration, nor are the federal courts barred from reviewing this issue. But, it is imperative to keep in mind the fact that "martial law"may be imposed on a selective basis,[58] which is exactly what has been [57]Whiting, 203. In addition to Milligan's rejection of these arguments, the Supreme Court in another "terrorist" case, expressly rejected a unilateral judgment by the Executive under Fourth Amendment principles; United States v. United States District Court, 407 U.S. 297 (1972).

done herein. As one noted scholar observes:

> Where . . . measures of martial rule have been undertaken in a situation which does not involve the existence of necessity, an aggrieved person is entitled to a remedy then and there. . . . [T]there is no doctrine which renders the courts impotent until the alleged emergency has vanished. This right to immediate redress has been upheld by the Supreme Court [citing Constantin, 287 U.S. at 403] [emphasis added].[59]

Professor Wiener also concludes:

> Persons detained in custody [by martial law] may seek, by writ of habeas corpus, to be released therefrom, or, after release, to sue those ordering or executing their arrest for damages, alleging an unlawful imprisonment.[60]

Colonel Winthrop, the most authoritative American military legal scholar, came to this conclusion regarding martial law:

> The most considerable and important part of the exercise of martial law is the making of arrests of civilians charged with offenses against the laws of war. But to arrest and hold at will . . . is practically to suspend the citizen's privilege of the writ of habeas corpus. . . . [Thus] it becomes material to inquire whether, under the provisions of the Constitution relating to the suspension of the privilege of the writ, the President, or a military commander representing him, is authorized to order or effect such suspension.[61] [emphasis added].

Milligan, additionally is instructive in that all nine Justices concurred in holding that the federal courts had "jurisdiction of the petition of Milligan for the writ of habeas corpus."[62]

Finally, the Court is urged to study U.S. ex rel. Palmer v. Adams, 26 F.2d 141 (D.CO, 1927), [1927 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1846][63] which possesses remarkably similar juridical habeas concepts, albeit imposed by State conditions. The Court first observed:

> Alongside of the regular form of government, . . . militiamen . . . are exercising arbitrary power, arresting people and holding them without charges. . . . The return . . . simply alleges that in the exercise of honest judgment the Governor deems it for the best interests of the community, and the preservation of law and order, to detain the petitioners without filing charges, admitting them to bail, or intent to submit them to a military or the local court for hearing and trial. [* 5; emphasis added]

> It seems to me there either must be martial law or no martial law, and, until there is, no rogatory body can lawfully go around . . . depriving individuals of the rights that the Constitution . . . guarantees. We have either one thing or the other. The two cannot exist side by side. [* 7; emphasis added].

[63]Appeal dismissed as moot, 29 F.2d 541 (8th Cir. 1928).

Finally, the Court concluded:

> Petitioners are claiming rights under the Federal Constitution, and I have been unable to find a case where the federal courts have recognized the right . . . to arrest and detain citizens at will, without filing charges, especially when it is admitted that the courts and civil authorities have not been interfered with, overthrown, or supplanted by the military forces. [*9-10; emphasis added].[64]

B. The De Facto Suspension of Habeas Corpus.

> The Privilege of the Writ of Habeas Corpus shall not be suspended, unless when in Cases or Rebellion or Invasion the public Safety may require it. Art. I, § 9, cl. 2, U.S. Constitution.

One commentator cogently observed:

> The important point is that where there is no suspension of the privilege of the writ the prisoner is able at all times to secure judicial inquiry as to the reasons for his being in custody. [emphasis added][65]

The process involving a Writ of Habeas Corpus is three-fold: the first is having a court entertain the Petition;[66] the second, involves the Court actually issuing the

[64]See, United States v. Yasui, 48 F.Supp. 40 (D.OR., 1942), for an exhaustive analysis of this issue under federal law. Yasui, like Korematsu, supra, is also another reason not to grant "deference" to Respondents', "military" decisions - these, and other Japanese "internment" convictions of WW II, were procured by fraud and "manipulated evidence" of a "serious wartime threat," and the convictions ultimately were set aside. *Yasui v. [66]Amici Curiae would agree that at least until now, the Courthouse doors have (continued...)

Writ[67]; and third, assuming arguendo that the Court grants a Writ, being able to enforce it. This third prong is the crux of this litigation.

One question and one question only, bring s this litigation to its head: Will the Respondents comply with an Order granting a Writ of Habeas Corpus? That was the dilemma that Chief Justice Taney faced in Ex Parte Merryman, 17 Fed.Cas. 144 (C.C.D. Md. 1861). He issued the Writ but the Marshall was unable to serve it, as Merryman was confined within the bowels of a secure, military installation (as is Hamdi), and President Lincoln simply chose to ignore it.[68]

If, as Respondents claim, "[The detention of] an enemy combatant . . . falls within the President's core war powers. . . ." [Resp.Br. 16], it is not unreasonable to assume that they will then continue their argument that "The military's determination that Hamdi is an enemy combatant . . . should be given effect," [Resp.Br . 25] and, as in Merryman, simply refuse to enforce any ensuing Court Order.[69] Thus, while the not been closed to the physical filing of Habeas Corpus petitions, as this case demonstrates. Compare, the prohibition on filing such a writ in Duncan v. Kahanamoku, 327 U.S. 304, 309 (1946).

[67]Or alternatively, issuing a "Show Cause" order. See, e.g., Walker v. Johnson, 312 U.S. 275 (1941).

[68]Merryman was decided before Congress acted to suspend the Writ in 1863.

[69]Merryman, did not address the Court's contempt power.

actual "privilege" seeking habeas relief might itself not be suspended, that becomes meaningless absent a way to enforce a granted Writ.

NACDL respectfully submits, that with one notable constitutional exception, the actions of the Respondents track exactly the actions of Lincoln's suspension of the Writ during the Civil War. Lincoln had the benefit of an Act of Congress on March 3, 1863, [12 Stat. 755] Respondents herein do not. Lincoln's actual suspension of habeas corpus was done on an ad hoc basis. As Milligan, supra, and Kahanamoku, supra, hold, if the civilian courts are open and functioning, it is unconstitutional to preclude the Great Writ.

Yet, a distillation of Respondents' arguments shows the parroting of Whiting's arguments, viz., it is the Commander-in-Chief, not the Judiciary, who determines what the federal courts can do in relation to a Unit ed States citizen. Milligan and its progeny show the continued error of that legal position, and if there is any doubt, Winthrop resolves it:

> Thus, as a general principle of law, it may be deemed to be settled by the rulings of the courts and the weight of legal authority, as well as by the action of Congress and practice of the Executive, that the President is not empowered of his own authority to suspend the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus. . . .[70]

[70]Winthrop, op cit., 830.

The President - if Respondents' arguments are followed - will have effectively suspended the privilege of habeas corpus on an ad hoc basis against Mr. Hamdi today, Mr. Padilla tomorrow, and thereafter, unknown and unchecked other citizens who do not meet Respondents criteria for "good" citizens. Such then is the end of liberty[71] and a repudiation of the Magna Carta:

> "No Freeman shall be taken, or imprisoned, or be disseised of his Freehold, or Liberties, or free Customs, or be outlawed, or exiled, or any otherwise destroyed; nor will we pass upon him, nor condemn him, but by lawful Judgment of his Peers, or by the Law of the Land." Magna Carta (1297)[72]

CONCLUSIONS

This case stands to define as Chief Justice Marshall observed, "The very essence of civil liberty" in our history and jurisprudence. But, it is not yet "ripe" for a decision on this interlocutory appeal. If the arguments of the Respondents are correct, viz., that the liberties of our citizenry are or can be determined solely by the Commander-in-Chief, then Amicus Curiae respectfully submits that 215 years of constitutional law have been in error, and the concept of an independent judiciary, a false premise of our Founding Fathers. Such a seminal and profound conceptual change cannot be made on this record where the facts have been barely addressed and the Petitioner having had no opportunity to confront and contest the "evidence" purportedly used against him. Walker v. Johnson, supra, and the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure[73] compel the obvious conclusion that Respondents' zeal is premature . If there is a legitimate factual basis under United States and international law for the detention of the Petitioner, let the Respondents "make their case," to include using the Classified Information Procedure Act. [74] If not, then the Great Writ must lie.

Petitioner is being held by U.S. troops, on a secure U.S. military installation, by and under orders of U.S. officials [the Respondents]. The profound const itutional issues pertaining to the fundamental separation of powers principle as well as the concept of "martial law," respectfully demand a more thorough and judicious treatment than what the status of this case allows. It is an insult to the Judiciary and especially to the Court below, for Respondents to argue that "national security" issues must truncate the fair and orderly administration of justice.

One of our earliest legal commentators on "military law," rejected the Respondents' position herein - and he was a military officer!

[73]This is indeed a civil action, governed by the F.R.Civ.P.

[74]18 U.S.C. App. § 1 et seq.

> The substitution of this power for the civil courts, subjects all persons to the arbitrary will of an individual, and to imprisonment for an indefinite period, or trial by a military body.
> Now, to guard against such abuse, the constitution guarantees the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus. . . .[75]

This Court is now the guardian of a citizen's rights and the principles of our Constitutional heritage. Terrorism must not result in tyranny, and the "home of the brave" must remain the "land of the free."

Lawful Combatants and Unprivileged Belligerents

Combatants. Anyone engaging in hostilities in an armed conflict on behalf of a party to the conflict. Combatants are lawful targets unless "out of combat."

Lawful Combatants. Receive protections of Geneva Conventions, specifically, the GWS, GWS (Sea), and GPW; gain "combatant immunity" for their warlike acts; and become prisoners of war if captured.

> Geneva Convention of 1949 Definition. (GPW, art. 4; GWS, art. 13.) Combatants include: armed forces of a Party to the conflict; militia, volunteer corps, and organized resistance movements belonging to a Party to the conflict that are under responsible command, wear a fixed distinctive sign recognizable at a distance, carry their arms openly, and abide by the laws of war; and members of armed forces of a government not recognized by a detaining authority or occupying power.
> Protocol I Definition. Article 43 states that members of the armed forces of a party to the conflict, except medical personnel and chaplains, are combatants. Article 44(3) of GP I allows that a belligerent attains combatant status by merely carrying his arms openly during each military engagement, and when visible to an adversary while deploying for an attack. GP I thus drops the requirement for a fixed recognizable sign. The U.S. believes this does not reflect customary international law and diminishes the distinction between combatants and civilians, thus undercutting the effectiveness of the Law of War.

Unprivileged belligerents. May be treated as criminals under the domestic law of the captor. Unprivileged belligerents may include spies, saboteurs, or civilians who are participating in the hostilities.

Forbidden Conduct with Respect to Enemy Combatants and Nationals

It is especially forbidden to declare that no quarter will be given, or to kill or injure enemy personnel who have surrendered. H. IV Reg. Art. 23. It is also forbidden to kill or wound treacherously individuals belonging to the hostile nation or armed forces. H. IV Reg. Art. 23. Belligerents are likewise prohibited to compel nationals of the enemy state to take part in hostilities against their own country. H. IV art. 23.

Assassination. Hiring assassins, putting a price on the enemy's head, and offering rewards for an enemy "dead or alive" is prohibited. (FM 27-10, para 31; E.O. 12333.) Targeting military leadership, however, is not assassination. See W. Hays Parks, Memorandum of Law: Executive Order 12333 and Assassination, Army Law. Dec.1989, at 4.

Non-combatants. The law of war prohibits attacks on non-combatants. Among others, non-combatants include civilians, medical personnel, chaplains, and those out of combat, including prisoners of war and the wounded and sick.

1. REISSUANCE AND PURPOSE

This Directive:

1.1. Reissues reference (a) to update policy and responsibilities within the Department of Defense for a program to ensure implementation of the international law of war, both customary and codified, about EPOW, to include the enemy sick or wounded, retained personnel, civilian internees (CIs), and other detained personnel (detainees). Detainees include, but are not limited to, those persons held during operations other than war.

1.2. Designates the Secretary of the Army as the Executive Agent for the Department of Defense for the administration of the DoD EPOW Detainee Program.

2. APPLICABILITY

This Directive applies to the Office of the Secretary of Defense (OSD), the Military Departments, the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, the Unified Combatant Commands, and the Defense Agencies. The term "Military Services," as used herein, refers to the Army, the Navy, the Air Force, the Marine Corps, and the Coast Guard when it is operating as a Military Service in the Navy.

3. POLICY

It is DoD policy that:

3.1. The U.S. Military Services shall comply with the principles, spirit, and intent of the international law of war, both customary and codified, to include the Geneva Conventions (references (b) through (e)).

3.2. The U.S. Military Services shall be given the necessary training to ensure they have knowledge of their obligations under the Geneva Conventions (references (b) through (e)) and as required by DoD Directive 5100.77 (reference (f)) before an assignment to a foreign area where capture or detention of enemy personnel is possible.

3.3. Captured or detained personnel shall be accorded an appropriate legal status under international law. Persons captured or detained may be transferred to or from the care, custody, and control of the U.S. Military Services only on approval of the Assistant Secretary of Defense for International Security Affairs (ASD(ISA)) and as authorized by the Geneva Conventions Relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War and for the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (references (d) and (e)).

3.4. Persons captured or detained by the U.S. Military Services shall normally be handed over for safeguarding to U.S. Army Military Police, or to detainee collecting points or other holding facilities and installations operated by U.S. Army Military Police as soon as practical. Detainees may be interviewed for intelligence collection purposes at facilities and installations operated by U.S. Army Military Police.

4. RESPONSIBILITIES

4.1. The Under Secretary of Defense for Policy shall:

4.1.1. Have primary staff responsibility for the DoD EPOW Detainee Program.

4.1.2. Ensure that the ASD(ISA) shall provide for overall development, coordination, approval, and promulgation of major DoD policies and plans, including final coordination of such proposed plans, policies, and new courses of action with the DoD Components and other Federal Departments and Agencies as necessary.

4.2. The Secretary of the Army, as the DoD Executive Agent for the administration of the DoD EPOW Detainee Program, shall act on behalf of the Department of Defense in the administration of the DoD EPOW Detainee Program to:

4.2.1. Develop and provide policy and planning guidance for the treatment, care, accountability, legal status, and administrative procedures to be followed about personnel captured or detained by, or transferred from the care, custody, and control of, the U.S. Military Services.

4.2.2. Provide for an EPOW and CI camp liaison and assistance program on transfer of persons captured or detained by the U.S. Military Services.

4.2.3. Plan for and operate a U.S. EPOW and CI Information Center and its branches.

4.2.4. Under the Geneva Conventions Relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War and for the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (references (d) and (e)), on the outbreak of an armed conflict, or when persons are captured or detained by the U.S. Military Services in the course of the full range of military operations, ensure that a national-level information center exists that can fully serve to account for all persons who pass through the care, custody, and control of the U.S. Military Services.

4.2.5. Provide, in coordination with the ASD(ISA), appropriate reports to the OSD, the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and information or reports to other U.S. Government Agencies or Components, to include the Congress of the United States, or to the International Committee of the Red Cross.

4.2.6. Designate a single point of contact to provide necessary advice and technical assistance to the ASD(ISA), the Military Departments, and the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

4.2.7. Ensure that the Judge Advocate General of the Army, in coordination
