FINRA National Adjudicatory Council, Non-Industry Member, 2009-

Pace University School of Law, 1996 – 2006

James D. Hopkins Professor of Law, 2003-05

Selected to fill the James D. Hopkins Chair (a rotating chair), in recognition of my teaching, scholarship and service contributions

Director of Research, Pace Investor Rights Project, 2003-2006

The Pace Investor Rights Project (PIRP) was established with a $200,000 grant arranged through New York Attorney General's office, with a threefold mission: to advocate on behalf of small investors; to run educational programs for small investors; and to foster research on topics related to investor justice. My activities as Director of Research included:

- Retained by National Association of Securities Dealers and New York Stock Exchange to conduct an empirical study of the fairness of the securities arbitration process.
- Organized Investor Rights Symposium that, in spring 2005, brought together a distinguished group of scholars, regulators, practitioners, and students to explore current issues affecting small investors.
- Drafted, or supervised students in drafting, more than twenty comment letters to the SEC or NASD on various rule proposals that affect small investors.

Founder and Co-Director, Securities Arbitration Clinic, 1997-2006

Established, at the request of the Securities and Exchange Commission, the first securities arbitration clinic in the nation, where students, under faculty supervision, provide representation to small investors who have disputes with their broker-dealers. In addition, I organized a program on “Establishing and Operating A Securities Arbitration Clinic” (spring 1999) (with support from the AALS Clinical Legal Education Section and the endorsement of the Clinical Legal Education Association)

Association of American Law Schools, Deputy Director, 1994-96

AALS is the learned society for legal educators. My responsibilities included assisting the Executive Director in the Association’s activities, including administration of its Professional Development Program and Faculty Recruitment Conference.
