COURSE DESCRIPTION:

This course examines the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenants on Civil and Political Rights, and Economic, Social, and Cultural Rights along with several treaties which have been promulgated relating to such matters as genocide, refugees, racial discrimination, and the political rights of women. Using a problem-oriented approach, students engage in a number of lawyering roles such as presenting testimony before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, oral argument before the U.S. Supreme Court, and drafting a petition for submittal to the United Nations Subcommittee on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities.
