UNIVERSITY OF CINCINNATI COLLEGE OF LAW
Early Decision Program (Binding)

- Candidates who apply through the University of Cincinnati College of Law's Early Decision Program commit to attend if they are admitted.
- When notified of acceptance under the Early Decision Program, a candidate must withdraw all other law school applications. In addition, candidates may not initiate any new applications following notification of their acceptance to the University of Cincinnati College of Law.
- Candidates may not apply for similar early decision consideration at any other law schools, but may apply to other institutions under other non-binding admissions processes.
- The University of Cincinnati College of Law may provide other law schools with the names of applicants accepted under the Early Decision Program.
- Those candidates not offered admission through the Early Decision Program may continue to be considered for admission to the schools to which they had previously applied and may initiate new applications, if they wish.
- Candidates who apply through Early Decision receive full scholarship consideration from the College of Law similar to regular decision applicants. Because Early Decision is a binding commitment, candidates for whom scholarship aid is a prerequisite should apply under the regular admissions process.
