COURSE DESCRIPTION:

Street Law is a national program of legal instruction designed for law students to teach high-school students. Each law student teaches the Street Law curriculum at an area high school during one fifty-minute section three days per week for ten weeks. The curriculum includes introduction to law, family law, consumer law, housing law, torts, and criminal law, with topics in contracts and procedure. The law student then tests and grades the high school students on this material. There is also a weekly classroom component during which the law students learn interactive teaching techniques and the substantive law they will be teaching. Class times at area high schools vary; students will be offered those times at the beginning of the semester.

Interested students must complete the application found on the Register link on the College web page and submit it to the Registrar along with a copy of their resume. Students selected for this experience will be registered by the Registrar.

SPECIAL NOTES:

Students may not enroll concurrently in the other extern programs. Students may only take this class once.
